From the New York Sun. THOUSANDS OF WOMEN RIDE IN HORSE cars in New York every day, of whom ninety-nine hundredths, or nine hundred and ninety-nine in a thousand, are in a state of next to complete ignorance of the scientific laws which dictate the methods of mounting and scending in safety, and threaten disaster upon ose who violate them. As a rule the cars are opped and started properly so that a woman can step on or off as though she were on her own staircase. But occasionally the horses will start a moment too soon, or the impatient female will attempt to step into the street while the car is still moving, and then there comes calamity, perhaps humiliating and embarra-sing, and always dangerous. The Son presents here a few luminous and important chapters upon the art of avoiding accidents in connec tion with the use of street cars.

Here the man with the fur collar paused until the general setting down of glasses indicated that the nervous strain upon the company had been relieved.

"How was that?" inquired the man on the end, pursuing the last few drops with the longest straw.

There are experts who can take such liber-ties with horse cars, but they are citizens with whom the art of catching on is a necessary part of their profession. As a rule, they are of the nole sex and under fitteen years of age. For example:

As in getting on, she seizes the front handle, slightly facing the horses. Don't be afraid to face too full to the front; the fuller, perhaps, the better. Then even if the car starts, a quick step or two can easily be taken with it, and when once having got your footing on the ground you can let go of the handle and walk away. The girl has pictured may venture to step off while the car is still in gentle motion.

IT BURNED FOR HOURS. Effects of a New York Cigar on a Lake Eri Fishing Trip.

"Make mine a cigar," said the man in a fur collar, setting down his case of samples. The four men who had already mentioned their preference lined up along the mahogany and watched the preparations of the whiteaproned compounder in expectant silence. "I reckon that's the first cigar I've tackled since last August," remarked the man with the tur collar reflectively. "Swear off?" asked the man on the end, motioning to put three straws in his. "Weil, hardly that. Somehow I haven't 460 carats, but they are not worth as much per carat as those of only three or four.

"The most beautiful diamond by far that I have ever seen was the one found at Kimberly by a little American named Porter Rhodes. I paid £5 just to look at it. The sight was a liberal education for a diamond expert. He afterward sold it to the Countess of Dudley for $500,000. Labouchere gave an amusing account in Truth of his efforts to sell it to the queen. It was lost once before it left Africa, and Rhodes gave the Zulu who returned it a reward of $75,000." seemed to hanker after terbacker since a yachting trip I took over on Lake Erie last sum-

"Well, you see, I was over in Buffalo on a business trip, and two friends of mine suggested a couple of days on the lake, so I knocked off work and joined them, Just as I was leaving the hotel a feller who travels for a New York cigar house gave me a handful of big, black cigars. He called 'em fishin' cigars' black cigars. He called 'em 'fishin' cigars'—

"Says he, 'Bill where was this cigar made?"
"New York,' says I. "Popular down there?" "'Used a good deal on fishin' trips, I believe,"

"'They're not built for fresh water, Bill." says he, heavin' a terrible heave. I hate to throw away a cigar half smoked, but this time me or the weed must go."

FROM EARTH TO SUN.

The Exact Distance as Measured by German

From the Youths' Companion. Many of the readers of The Companion may have seen the transit of Venus in 1882, when the earth's beautiful sister planet, moving in its orbit exactly between the earth and the sun, appeared upon the bright disk of the latter in the shape of a round black spot-a world in silhouette. Although most ten years have elapsed, astronomers have hardly yet completed the computations and discussions required to give us the best possible knowledge of the sun's distance that can be derived from the observations made at that time. Prof. Anwers has recently published the reastronomers during both the transit of 1882 and the previous transit of Venus in 1874. After carefully comparing the measurements made on the two occasions, and correcting as pearly and the previous transit of Venus in 1874. After carefully comparing the measurements made on the two occasions, and correcting as nearly as possible all the known errors, he finds for what is known as the sun's parallax 8.880 seconds. This simply means that half of the diameter of the earth as seen from the sun would subtend an angle of eight seconds and eight hundred and eighty-one thousandths of a second.

The distance of the sun, as indicated by the parallax given above, would be 92,059,700 miles: but owing to probable errors in the observations, which cannot be corrected, the parallax is uncertain to the extent of about one fourhundredth part either way, so that the true distance may be as great as 92,289,700 miles, or as small as 91,829,700 miles.

This German computation makes the sun's distance somewhat less than has usually been assumed in the recent text books of astronomy. Other measures based on the transits of assumed in the recent text books of astronomy. Other measures based on the transits of 1874 and 1882 have varied from 91,850,000 miles up to 93,428,000 miles, the number generally preferred being about 92,900,000 miles, although the distance corresponding to the parallax adopted for use in the nautical almanac is about 92,400,000.

At first sight it may appear surprising that there should be such wide differences in the various measures, but really the differences are not as serious as they appear to be. The sun is a body about 866,000 miles in diameter, so that the probable error, one way or the other, in any of the measures given above does not amount to more than about one-quarter of the sun's own diameter, while the variation of the distance in the course of every year, owing to the elliptical form of the earth's orbit, is more than a dozen times as great as the error in question and twice as greatas the difference between the extreme measures.

Vast fish beds, covering hundreds of square miles in northwestern Colorado, are brought to light and cannot fail to awaken a great interest in scientific circles. The beds, so far as traced by Mr. Hart, extend a distance of 150 miles in the region of the Green River country and were traced to points more than 100 miles toward the interior of the state. Scientists have known of the existence of primeval deposits of fish in Wyoming, but for the first time a discovery of similar character is reported in this state. The beds are 150 to 200 feet thick. To the ordinary observer their origin would remain forever a mystery.

How untold millions of fish could be piled in distinct layers over a large area of country which is now 5,000 to 10,000 feet above sea level is a problem which might stagger the most profound geologist. After careful investigation Mr. Hart has arrived at a theory which at least appears plausible. According to his theory there was a time when the region of the fish deposits formed the shore of a salt water ocean. As the tides swept the waters against the rocky shores marshes were formed on the opposite side of the rocky barrier. The tides surged against the barrier with such force as to throw the fish into the shallow waters. Owing to the heated temperature of the air the water in the marshes evaporated before the tide again re-
